Herosene.

It seems s'range that, although so many years have clapsed since kerosene became a common means of artiflial illumination, so much igcorance prevails as to ite use, qualities and danheirs vs. Rector, the undersigned, commission-gets. There is no means of producing artifical light that is so extensively used, and yet there are weekly—almost daily—records of painful and sometimes fatal accidents from its explosion, from its use for kindling, or from the improper combustion of its gases. Kerosene is a concentrated hydro-carbon, and with an insufficient supply of exygen it gives off, when lighted, large volumes, of hydrogen and cirbonic acid gases, both inmical to health, and when in sufficient quantity, fatal (or life, Kero-widely) known as one of the most productive and widely known as one of the most productive and widely known as one of the most productive and when in sufficient quantity, fatal to life. Kerosence cannot be properly burned in an open

To the ordinary lamp a chimney is added. which projects several inches above the flame, the hight of the chimney being regulated by the amount of the flaid burned, or the eize of the flune. The object of this chimney is not to prevent the flame from fluing or to hinder it from being blown out by a guit, but is simply to induce the necessary amount of exigen to make perfect combustion. On lighting the lamp the glass chimney is almost instantly heated, inducing an upward current of air which rushes in through the network of the perforated base. The exegen in the atmes pheric current feeds the flame, consumes the carbon and induces a brilliant light. With such perfect combustion the use of koresene in our dw.llings is entirely harmless, if a sufficient supply of atmosphericair is provided.

But there are plenty of instances of imperfect or mbustion and consequent injury. It is easy to datect this if, on entering a lighted room from out of doors or an adjusting lighted room, the atmosphere is oppressive, or the peculiar small of carbonic acid gas is perceived, it is certain in this case that there is imperfect combusnot complied with. cion and improper use of kerosene. This is produced by turning down the wick-a most reprehensible practice-or allowing it to smoke from being turned too high. This latter fault, however, is the more easily remedied because its effects are instantly visible.

A streak of dull flame and a discharge of thick smoke appea's at ores to the eye; but when the lamp is turned down no visible sign tells of the vitiation of the atmosphere that is going on, and as the lungs and the nerves of smelling become gradually accustomed to the carbonic acid and bydrogen, the occupants of the room sometimes do not detect the trouble and attribute their sense of lassitude to weariness and their headache to a cold. The fact is apparent, however, to one who comes in front of the outer air from a room where the atmosphere is impure. The presence of these unseen gases of unseen combustion mean the presence I' headache, vertigo, and, if sleeping and unconscious, they mean death. The trouble with the turned down lamp is that while the fisme heats the burning oil just enough to disengage its compounded gases of carbonic sed and hydrogen it does not heat enough to induce the proper supply of cxygen to consume them, and they are left to poison and saturate the air of the entire room there is a great temptation to these cornshuck souls who have no sentiments above a cent to market at the risk of health and life. There are law keresene lamps in the market which are properly constructed. From the variety of chimneys used varying from broad double, saucer-like dome to a straight, narrow cylinder, it would appear that lamp makers imagined that this most essential portion of the lamp was simply a subject of whim or taste.

There are lanterns for burning kerosene that are so imperfect in combustion that they poison the air of a large room in a few minutes. The form of chimney must certainly affect the burning of the oil. There is a great difference between a flattened dome of eight inches in dismeter and a straight cylinder of one and a half it ches diameter, not slone in form, but in capacity as chimneys, albeit their hights above the base may be the same. It would seem that the construction of the kerosene burning lamps should be clevated from the rut of merely mechanical skill and unreasoning farcy to that of scientific investigation and practical value. STEEL and IRON DOUBLE and SINGLE PLOW PLATES, finished and unfinished, just received and for sale at SS King et, corner of Royal. Call and see.
